

A close-up photograph of a duck's head, showing its eyes and beak, peering over a large, vibrant green leafy plant. The background is a plain, light grey color.

...october 26 2009...

child of my now-not-then how is it that i could pretend you were and are both here and there even when invisible –

those moments we forgot to share along the surfaces of when hide in whispers dreamers sing beneath the cells of bone and skin –

i feel the murmur of your voice within the almost of my heart – vibrating hidden memories that fingertips shall someday trace.

©pamela swanson
www.poetpam.com